Re Laura Bates's piece: I immediately thought of part of a conversation between two young-ish boy-men that I overheard the other day as they walked by me. This is all I heard from one of them: "And you try to talk to a girl and she just looks at you like you're the scum of the earth." Or something to that effect. He was just so indignant. Male entitlement is inescapable.

- Two things in her piece stuck out to me:
1. I wonder if she felt as if she had to pay lip service to liberal feminist discourse with her mentioning of "transwomen" and "sex workers."
 2. Why was this piece in the "Women" section of the newspaper? We already know this shit. The people who need to read it aren't reading the "Women" section of the paper ffs. Business as usual.

It's disheartening how some are talking about Kim Kardashian in the wake of the robbery, but it's proof that women being "empowered" gives them no actual power over anything.
